WE WILL NEVER KNOW...

In June 1950, a man suddenly appeared in the centre of Times Square in New York. He was about 30 years old, was wearing old-fashioned clothes and looked confused. A minute later, he was hit by a car and killed before anyone had managed to do anything to help him.

When police examined the man, they found 19th-century money in his pockets. They also found business cards, with the name Rudolph Fentz on them. When the police began looking into the occurrence, they could not find any records of the dead man. They had almost given up hope when they came across the widow of Rudolph Fentz Junior. According to the widow, her father-in-law, Rudolph Fentz Senior, had vanished one day in 1876 at the age of 29.

Amazingly, the address of her father-in-law was the same as the address on the business cards from the dead man's pockets. It appeared that Rudolph Fentz had gone missing in 1876 and then reappeared in 1950. Many people believed that he had travelled through time.

In 2000, a researcher decided to try to get to the bottom of this unusual story. His research revealed that the people and the events of the story were actually fictional. It turned out that the source for the story was in fact a story called I'm Scared by the famous science-fiction writer Jack Finney. Although no copies of the original story were ever found, the researcher claimed that it was originally published in September 1951. It seemed that he had finally solved the mystery. Or so everyone thought.

In 2007, another researcher found a newspaper story about the incident from April 1951. Amazingly, this newspaper was printed almost five months before the short story I'm Scared.

As a result of this discovery, some people have developed a theory that Jack Finney's fictional story was based on a true story that he had read about in the newspaper. Yet, since Finney died in 1995 and he was never questioned about this, we will never know.
